

Resume Outline

The objective of a resume is to make the employer interested enough to learn more about you, and ultimately call you to arrange an interview. It should set you apart from the rest of the applicants and show why YOU are the best candidate for the job. It serves as a summary of your personal history and qualifications for a particular job. This is your first impression to a potential employer, so make it a good one!

Remember, most employers will spend less than 30 seconds scanning your resume – so it needs to be concise and to the point.

HEADING

Your name, address, phone number and email should go here. If you live on campus, provide your campus and permanent addresses and telephone numbers.

If posting your resume on an online job site, only list name and email (be discrete to avoid online identity theft).

OBJECTIVE (optional)

If included, this should be a statement of the kind of employment you are seeking right now. Be careful not to restrict yourself by using a specific job title unless you are definitely sure this is the only kind of job you want. You will want to make changes if you find different career paths of interest to you. An objective doesn't need to be on your resume because you can go over that information in your cover letter where you can be more specific. Regardless, you'll be better prepared in your job search by having the objective worked out whether it is on paper or stored mentally.

EDUCATION (mandatory)

Include college degrees or certificates received, names of schools, graduation date (month and year), major, minor, or concentration areas studied. Include institution, city, and state. DO NOT include High School information.

List most recently attended institution first. Grade point average is optional depending on your field and your GPA. (List GPA if 3.00/4.00 or better). If you are listing related course work, it should be under a separate heading.

EXPERIENCE (Work, Computer, Teaching, Leadership, Military, etc.)- pick experiences that are applicable to you.

List most recent job title or position, dates of employment (month and year), name and location (city/state) of employer. Then, list brief statements (beginning with action verbs) describing your accomplishments and responsibilities. Use numbers and figures to back up examples. Do not list supervisor name & phone.

Military experience- list the branch, years in service, rank, special assignments, awards, distinctions, pertinent skills, and knowledge acquired.

SKILLS

Language ability can be placed under this or a more specific category. List your computer skills and any other skills employer might find valuable.

CERTIFICATES, PUBLICATIONS, PROFESSIONAL MEMBERSHIPS, AFFILIATIONS, etc.

Include if applicable. You can also list them under Honors and Activities

HONORS and ACTIVITIES

Dean's list, scholarships, and other awards can be listed here. Emphasize activities that would enhance your image in the employer's eye. Pull from the job description when possible. Include dates of activities and office or executive position held. You can include volunteering under this or under separate heading.

REFERENCES

Do not list references on your resume. They should be listed on a separate page and only submitted to an employer if requested to do so. Use professional references and do not use friends or family.

Avoid using the statement "Professional References Available Upon Request". Employers will expect you to have professional references so there is no need to list this on your resume – it takes up extra space. Remember, always ask for permission before asking for someone to be a reference. Your reference list should include, name, title, address, phone number, and e-mail address.

Your Name Here

Permanent Address: 123 Street Address, City, State, Zip

Phone Number (Cell and/or Home)

Email address (use discretion – what image does your address convey?)

When posting resume online list only Name/Phone/Email to avoid identity theft

OBJECTIVE Use concise language to describe the position you are seeking – be job/career specific, do not write a paragraph, but limit it to one sentence (Optional)

SUMMARY OF SKILLS Match your skills & qualifications with those listed in the job posting or those skills related to job/career, and place them in this section using individual words or bulleted statements (Optional)

EDUCATION List degree. Bachelor of Arts/Bachelor of Science and Major/Concentration/Minor - Graduation Date
Name of School and City/State (Shepherd University, Shepherdstown, WV)
List GPA (only if 3.0 or higher) and academic honors/scholarships if desired

RELEVANT EXPERIENCE Title of position, Name of Company/Organization, City/State - Dates
(Do not list street address, supervisor's name, phone, or wage)

- Relevant Experience means any experience (paid or unpaid) that is related to your objective (job/career you are seeking)
- Internship experience could be listed in this section
- List in reverse chronological order, most recent experience first
- Begin sentence fragments with action verbs to describe responsibilities and accomplishments (how did you benefit the company/organization)
- Include examples of transferable skills learned such as teamwork, leadership, organization and communication

OTHER WORK EXPERIENCE Job Title, Name of Organization, City/State – Dates
(Do not list street address, supervisor's name, phone, or wage)

- List other work experience in this section; work that is less relevant
- Include transferable skills utilized in this position

- ✓ Always list references on a separate page; never on your resume!
- ✓ Reference page should contain 3-5 professional references
- ✓ Do not list individuals before you obtain their agreement to serve as your references
- ✓ Provide complete contact information for each individual and be consistent with formatting

RESUME CHECKLIST

- Use 8.5" x 11" paper, 1-2 pages (if 2 pgs, put name in top right corner of 2nd pg).
- Choose white or off-white resume paper and black ink
- Keep margins 1" wide at sides and bottom; (½ " if necessary)
- Use short phrases, in bullets, beginning with a variety of action words to demonstrate qualifications, accomplishments, skills...
- Verbs in a correct tense: present tense for current job (e.g. "Provide..."); past tense for previous jobs (e.g. "Provided...")
- Do not use personal pronouns such as "I" or "me" throughout your resume
- Provide positive and honest information; never lie on your resume
- Use simple, professional, easy-to-read font, e.g. Arial, Calibri, Times New Roman (10-12 points for text)
- Leave off personal information such as SSN, sex, age, marital status
- Do not list wages, company street addresses, supervisors' names, references, salary requirements
- Remember, references should NOT be listed on your resume – list on a separate sheet – do not submit with resume unless requested to do so
- Look at your resume through the eyes of an employer and ask yourself, "If I were an employer, would I want to interview this person?"
- Do NOT staple or paper clip your resume! If you get to two pages, be sure your name is in the top right corner of the second page
- Proofread, the more people looking over your resume, the better.
- Incorporate keywords from job description
- If resume is two pages long, the second page needs to be completely filled
- Only states should be abbreviated
- Name should be about 2 points bigger than the rest of the resume

Avoid These Common Resume Mistakes

1. Focusing only on job duties

One of the most common mistakes is to turn your resume into a boring list of job duties. Instead, use your job descriptions as an opportunity to show how you benefited the organization. Provide examples of how you made a difference in each position. Use “results oriented” statements. Did you receive an award or special recognition? What challenges did you face? How did you overcome them? What skills did you acquire?

2. Objective statement is too general or flowery

Be specific and stick to one sentence. Be careful not to turn the objective into a rambling paragraph that takes up too much space on your resume. Short and succinct will be more effective. Also, avoid repetition in your resume. Use a variety of action verbs to highlight your accomplishments.

3. Resume is too short or too long

Resumes for new grads and entry-level job-seekers are often one page. However, you may have enough experience to warrant a longer resume. If this is the case, do not try to condense the information to make it fit on one page. Doing this may cause you to eliminate important information. The most important guideline is that every word should sell the candidate to the employer. A good rule is never more than 2 pages, but no matter what the length, the resume must capture attention on the first page, preferably the first third of the first page.

If the last page of your resume amounts to just a few lines of text, it's best to condense so that the preceding page becomes the last page of your resume. Conversely, don't add superfluous text just to fill up the last page of your resume - never fluff up content for the sake of filling space. Whatever page your resume ends on, text should fill at least three quarters of the page.

4. Use of personal pronouns (I and me)

Use action verbs to begin your job descriptions. Descriptive action words like: managed, supervised, coordinated, etc., are more powerful when they come at the beginning of a description. Avoid using first-person (“I” or “Me”) on your resume. These can be used in your cover letter.

5. Use personal information

Personal information cannot be used as criteria in the hiring process; therefore, do not include it. There are several exceptions to this rule. Some entertainment positions and jobs outside of the United States may ask for this type of information. Contact Career Services if you have questions.

6. No key words

Many medium and large sized companies use technology to scan and store resumes. The only hope you have that a human being will view your resume is if you use relevant industry buzzwords on your resume. These should not be in a separate section; rather, they should be sprinkled throughout the resume. Read job descriptions for positions that interest you to find key words that you can use in your resume.

7. References available...

Employers know that you already have references. You do not need to add the line, “References available upon request.” Ask your professional contacts (supervisors, professors, etc.) ahead of time for a permission to list them as your references, and alert them every time they might be contacted by an employer. It is also good to let them know which position you applied for and send them the job description.

8. Typos!

One typo can torpedo your chances to get a job with an organization. Proofread your resume several times. Do not rely on spell check to catch everything. Ask a friend to proofread your resume. Have a professional from Career Services read your resume. It needs to be absolutely perfect.

Developing Strong Bullet Points

Think about skills used or value added – not simply the job description

Use action verbs

Any strong bullet point begins with a strong action verb. Additionally, it is important to vary your verbs throughout your resume. If you feel as though you are recycling the same verbs throughout your resume, reference the action verbs list in this packet for other ideas. Try to use a different action verb for every bullet under a given work or extracurricular experience. Finally, choose professional, appropriate verbs that you would use in a conversation.

Quantify

It is crucial that you try to quantify your bullets as best as you can. This allows the recruiters to determine the degree of the work you accomplished. For example, instead of saying “trained new employees on restaurant closeout procedures”, try quantifying and saying “trained 7 new employees on restaurant closeout procedures”. By simply quantifying your bullet points, employers can get a better idea of the impact you had on that organization.

Be relative

Sometimes it is difficult to determine the degree of your impact when your work and your extracurricular experiences are from smaller organizations. For example, say you worked as an intern in a Pittsburgh advertising agency. You may have a bullet point similar to, “Developed a series of 5 advertisements that increased sales for the client $5,000 from Quarter 3 to Quarter 4”.

When looking at your resume a recruiter who works for a large corporation may not see a $5,000 increase as a great impact. Therefore, it may be more impactful to write, “Developed a series of 5 advertisements that increased sales for the client by 5% from Quarter 3 to Quarter 4”.

Stand Out

Often times, bullet points tend to state the obvious. For example, if someone was a server, he or she may have a bullet point stating, “Served 100 customers per shift”. While it is great to quantify, recruiters know that servers serve customers. Bullets are much more effective when they are focused on any special projects or tasks that truly set the person apart from the other employees.

Did you ever train anyone? Were you recognized for outstanding service? Were you assigned to a special project? Did you assist in increasing sales? For example, something similar to “Promoted to lead trainer after training 6 new servers on Point of Sale system and company customer service standards” is a more effective bullet than “Served 100 customers per shift”.

Customize to the Job Description

The resume you send out should be customized to the exact job. Although it is very convenient to make mass copies, to be most effective it should highlight what the employer is looking for. Looking at a job description, try and highlight the key qualifications that the employer is looking for in an ideal employee. Use the language of the employer so when they see your resume, they can actually envision you working at the company. Additionally, tailor your experiences and resume to the individual job. If you have past lifeguarding experience that doesn't fit with the skills that a financial analyst position requires, leave it off and substitute it with another, more relevant section (for instance, special projects).
